

Online offenders pursued by regional organised crime units

Published on 4 November 2024

Building a clear intelligence picture of those believed to be organising and influencing violence

Brief 2 mins read

Regional organised crime units (ROCUs) across the UK have been working closely with local police forces and national agencies to track down and arrest offenders involved in online crimes, such as fraud, hacking and other digital offences.

The coordinated efforts are part of a broader strategy to better protect the public from the growing threat of online crime, ensuring that offenders are brought to justice.
