

What are the attitudes of the police workforce towards higher education following the introduction of the Police Education Qualifications Framework (PEQF)

Exploring the views of police workforce towards higher education of police officers since the introduction of the PEQF.

Key details

| | |
|--------------------------------|---|
| Lead institution | Canterbury Christ Church University |
| Principal researcher(s) | Graham Weaver GW356@canterbury.ac.uk |
| Police region | South East |
| Level of research | Masters |
| Project start date | September 2025 |
| Date due for completion | August 2026 |

Research context

The aim of this research is to investigate the attitudes of current police officers and police staff towards police higher education. In particular, it will explore the hypothesis that the police workforce does not see the benefit in higher-level police education. This is particularly relevant since the introduction of the PEQF and subsequent alternative non-degree entry routes.

The intention is to replicate previous research with the general public and invite comparison between the views of the general public and the police workforce.

Research methodology

21/06/2026

What are the attitudes of the police workforce towards higher education following the introduction of the Police Education Qualifications Framework (PEQF)

The research will be conducted via a questionnaire sent to the workforce of a police force in the south-east of England.